A Harvard Case Study: Gender Equity

Business School Is Put to the Test by a Push to Foster Female Success

By JODI KANTOR 1:54 PM ET

An aggressive program intended to create an environment where women could thrive brought improvements, but also resentment and uncertainty.

Courage is ... The Harvard Business School class of 2013 was part of an experiment to improve gender relations.

CRISIS IN SYRIA

A Weapon Seen as Too Horrid, Even in War, Stirs Outrage

By STEVEN ERLANGER

Chemical weapons have caused only a small fraction of the deaths in Syria's civil war, but the response they have provoked echoes that from wars around the world during the 20th century.

European Union Wants U.N. Report Before Any Strike

By MICHAEL R. GORDON 10:06 AM ET

The top foreign policy official for the European Union endorsed the French decision to wait until United Nations inspectors submitted their report on an Aug. 21 chemical attack, even though the results might be "preliminary."
