

Louis Georges Brillouin.

The death is announced in Paris of Louis Georges Brillouin, the painter. He was born at Saint Jean d'Angely, April 22, 1817. He was a pupil of Drolling and of Cabat. He exhibited in 1845 among many celebrated works, "Un Recit Terrible," "Une Partie Decisive," and "Le Tintoret Donnant une Lecon de Dessin a Sa Fille"; in 1847, "L'Atelier de Rubens," and "Personnages Tires des Poesies de Victor Hugo"; in 1849 "Les Deux Prisonniers," and "Quatre Sujets Italiens"; in 1857, "Un Sermon en Provence," and "Une Visite d'Amateurs"; in 1859, "Rembrandt dans son Atelier," and "Amateurs de Peinture en Visite"; in 1861, "Polichinelle Malade," and "La Partie de Musique"; in 1863, "Bredouille"; in 1865, "Chasseur"; in 1867, "Le Portrait de L'Hoste," and "La Patrouille"; in 1868, "L'Ecot de Lantara," and "La Jeunesse de Callot"; in 1869, "Un Bibliophile," and "Un Homme d'Armes"; in 1870, "L'Equipment"; in 1874, "Les Noces de Georges Dandin," "Lindor," and "La Lande et le Marais"; in 1875, "Vieux Papiers," "Vieille Pipe," and "Mandolinata"; in 1876, "La Vocation d'un Cadet de Famille," and "L'Antichambre"; in 1877, "Bouquet a Chloe"; in 1878, "Le Portrait." His career was a series of triumphs, but he retired ten years ago, and lived after that almost unknown, in the solitude of a little country house near Paris.

Mrs. Charlotte Perry Sinclair.

Mrs. Charlotte Perry Sinclair died Friday evening in her home, 21 East Eighty-ninth Street, ten days after the death of her husband, Samuel Sinclair. Mrs. Sinclair was the youngest child of Capt. Ebenezer Perry, and was born in Bedford, N. H., June 10, 1824. Her mother was a sister of Horace Greeley's father, and was present when the famous editor was born. Mrs. Sinclair was prominent in social circles years ago, and among her intimate friends were many of the most cultured men and women of her day. The funeral will be private, and the burial will be in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Obituary Notes.

—Capt. George Chase of Company I, Eighth Regiment, who was under court-martial for employing substitutes at the encampment in Peekskill last Summer and who died Friday morning of consumption, in his home, 443 East Fifty-eighth Street, was buried at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The services were held in St. Thomas's Episcopal Church.

—William J. Quigley, seventy-eight years old, died at his home in West Hoboken last evening from cancer. Mr. Quigley was a merchant in New-York for almost half a century. Having amassed a fortune, he retired from business several years ago. He never took any part in public affairs, confining himself to business entirely.

—William Dewey, seventy-three years old, died suddenly in Gloversville, N. Y., Saturday. He was formerly a member of the Massachusetts State Legislature.

—Mr. Jamieson, a Director of the Anglo-American Oil Company and a conspicuous figure in London, died Saturday, at Kensington, of influenza.

KILLED IN A DRUNKEN QUARREL.

The Quarrel Began in a Saloon Which Was Open on Sunday.

Philip Schehlein, a laborer, fifty-six years old, who lived at 505 West Forty-fourth Street, lost his life last evening, while in a drunken quarrel with Charles Simon, a harnessmaker, who lives in rooms over his shop, 503 West Forty-fifth Street. The quarrel began in the saloon of William Klein, Tenth Avenue and West Forty-fourth Street.

The men were seen coming out of the side door of the saloon by Joseph O'Neill, who lives at 566 West Thirty-sixth Street, and who happened to be coming down the street at the time. O'Neill says he saw Simon hit Schehlein, who fell to the pavement.

O'Neill ran to Schehlein's home, a few doors away, and notified his family of the trouble. When Schehlein was picked up he was found to be dead. In falling, his head struck the pavement and fractured his skull.

Simon declared he only slapped Schehlein in self-defense. The barkeeper admitted that the men had quarreled in the saloon.

When the saloon was visited by a reporter later in the day, it was still open and full of men. Simon and O'Neill were both locked up.

Schehlein had a wife and seven children.

Joseph B. Lockwood Dead.

Joseph B. Lockwood, well known in Wall Street, died yesterday afternoon at his residence, 45 East Sixty-eighth Street, after an illness of several months.

Mr. Lockwood was born in this city over sixty years ago. He at first went into commercial life, but later devoted his attention to the management of large estates. For twenty years, as executor and trustee of the estates of well-known families, he kept an office at 52 Wall Street. He was a Trustee of the Bowery Savings Bank, a Director in the New-York Juvenile Asylum, and a member of the St. Nicholas Society. He was also one of the Elders and the Treasurer of the South Reformed Church, Madison Avenue near Thirty-eighth Street, and his funeral will take place from there Wednesday morning.

Mr. Lockwood leaves a wife, the daughter of the late Tarrant Putnam, and three children—two daughters and a son.

The New York Times

Published: January 1, 1894

Copyright © The New York Times