

Leora Dana

He taught church history at St. Sergius from 1946 until 1951, when he joined the faculty of St. Vladimir's in Crestwood. He soon became recognized as a leading authority on Orthodox liturgical theology and was asked to speak and teach at many other institutions of higher learning. These included Columbia University, New York University and the Union Theological Seminary and the General Theological Seminary in New York City.

He was appointed dean of St. Vladimir's Seminary in 1962.

Father Schmemmann was the author of numerous articles and books. His books included "For the Life of the World," "Introduction to Liturgical Theology," "Ultimate Questions" and "Church, World, Mission."

"For the Life of the World" was translated into eight languages and remains one of the most widely read books on Orthodox Christianity written for the general public.

He is survived by his wife, Juliana, a former headmistress of the Spence School in New York City and now a teacher at the Brearley School; a son, Serge, who is a New York Times corre-
