

LONSDALE & PRIVATE.

English Prisoner Released by Germans Was a Street Car Conductor.
By Herbert Frothingham, Wireless Telegrams to New York, Feb. 28.

LONDON, Saturday, Jan. 2.—Private Wireless London, which says, according to a Daily Telegraph dispatch, that the New York Times statement suggests is a good one, implies a reference of intelligence to a London man who was a member of the London Publishers of the West Africa Bureau.

He was called from his employment as a street car conductor by notice on the outbreak of the war and took part in the battle of Mons, where he was wounded and taken prisoner on Aug. 24, afterward being imprisoned in the prisoner camp, where he was later released on parole for securing a German passport.

Lonsdale's wife, who has two young children, is living in London.
